MANEUVERS UNDERWAY

Uneasiness Seen in Czechoslovakia; French, British Alert for Trouble

BERLIN, Aug. 15.—(INS)—German army maneuvers got under way in the eastern regions of the Reich today, with rumors of Nazi coups.

German officials deprecated all such reports as the work of professional alarmists and insisted the army games were being carried out along lines conceived and announced many months ago.

The Nazis declared themselves at a loss to understand the tension caused by the maneuvers, pointing out that other European armies have embarked upon identical military games recently without arousing any international anxiety. Coincident to the maneuvers, work on Germany's east fortification proceeded at top speed. The total number of men engaged in the work was not known, but was estimated at close to 300,000.

Throughout the day, tanks and military lorries lumbered over heavily guarded roads to the war game areas, while scores of military airplanes darkened the skies. While the government insisted the games were smaller than in previous years, they were planned on a specific scale so as to show improvements in military mechanization.

LONDON, Aug. 15.—(INS)—Uneasiness in Czechoslovakia over the German military maneuvers is growing rapidly, according to reports in London today, but British and French statesmen refused to become alarmed although they remained alert for trouble.

All signs pointed to a waning of the week-end war scare that rocked Europe in most capitals except Prague. Despite the huge scale of the Reich war games, most diplomatic circles firmly declined to exaggerate their political importance.

It was believed that one reason for the better feeling in London and Paris was a report that Marshal Italo Balbo, on a visit to Germany, had transmitted to Chancellor Hitler the advice of Premier Mussolini against taking any sudden, drastic action.

London morning newspapers, however, reported that Czechoslovakia is tense with fear, despite assurances from Berlin that the German military maneuvers are no more significant than any other war games.

Citing the renewed nervousness, the News-Chronicle attributed it in part to a Rome announcement that Italy is ready to close all Alpine passes along her northern border in the event of an emergency.

ENJOYABLE TIME

Mr. and Mrs. Rex Hunter and son Rex, Jr., Miss Edna McClure, Beaver road and Venice avenue, spent two days last week in Atlantic City, N. J. There they joined Mrs. Joseph Coar and Miss Sada Coar, Pittsburgh, and all motored to Cape May, N. J., where they celebrated the wedding anniversary of Mr. and Mrs. Hugh L. Porter, at Windsor Hotel. Mrs. Coar and daughter and Mr. and Mrs. Porter returned to Bristol with Mr. and Mrs. Hunter, where they remained until Friday as their guests.

Is Made Known at Party

Mr. and Mrs. Pasquale Riccio, 423 Dorrance street, entertained relatives and friends Saturday evening. The home was decorated in pink and blue. An orchestra provided music for dancing. During the evening, Louis Angelo, Dorrance street, announced the engagement of Mr. and Mrs. Riccio's daughter, Elizabeth, to Dominick Roberto, son of Mr. and Mrs. Anthony Roberto, 352 Lincoln avenue. The fete ones received many gifts. Refreshments were served to 100 guests from Bristol, Philadelphia and New York. No date has been set for the wedding.

HISTORICAL SOCIETY FIRE-PLACE IS COPIED

Replica of Prized Piece is Displayed at Franklin Institute

ONE OF FEW REMAINING

A replica of one of the few existing "Pennsylvania Fireplaces" which is the property of Bucks County Historical Society, Doylestown, has been fashioned and is now on display at the Franklin Institute, Philadelphia.

The reproduction, which is in the basement of the Institute, consists of a colonial mantel, fire-place, and stove. It was fashioned in the Institute shops, after drawings were made by W. E. Sparks, Philadelphia, and is of authentic size and design. The drawings were made from the photographs of Franklin's original drawings and from the stove at Doylestown.

The hearth-warmer which affords an interesting contrast with modern home heating units also on display at the Institute, has a special appeal to students of the famous inventor. It did not bring to him as much fame as he received from his later achievement.

Woman Is Slightly Hurt
In Early Morning Crash

One woman was slightly injured in a crash of two automobiles yesterday morning at Croydon.

Mrs. Henry Howard Kamp, Rutledge street, Philadelphia, sustained lacerations of the forehead and lower limb, when a car operated by her husband and one driven by Joseph Mullin, 6237 Charles street, Philadelphia, collided at the intersection of Bristol Pike and Newportville road, at 3:30 a. m. She was treated in Harriman Hospital.

The Kamp car was being operated toward Bristol on Bristol Pike, and the Mullin machine was entering the Pike from Newportville road.

The case was investigated by Private Reeser, of Oxford Valley Highway Patrol barracks.

HULMEVILLE

A week's motor trip is being participated in by the Misses Marion E. Peck and Grace H. Hlick. They plan to visit the Thousand Islands, Ausable Chasm and other points of interest in New York state and New England.

Seventy-five were served at the peach festival conducted by the Epworth League on Neshaminy Methodist Church lawn, Saturday evening.

Mrs. Emma Lovett, Langhorne, was a guest yesterday of Charles Haefner and family.

Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Everitt, Harrisburg, have been visiting the former's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Everitt, Middletown Township.

CONDITION FAIR

The condition of Mrs. Joseph Smith, 320 Radcliffe street, who sustained injuries in a motor accident, Saturday morning, is reported by the attending physician as fair. Mrs. Smith, it is stated, is suffering considerable pain from a broken rib and broken clavicle, and her general condition is as well as could be expected, states the physician. Mrs. Smith was taken to the Wagner hospital, after the machine in which she was riding, and another car, crashed at Andalusia, Saturday morning.

ON MOTOR JAUNTS

Mr. and Mrs. Joseph McClain and children, Mr. and Mrs. Edward Winder, Bath Road, motored to Atlantic City, N. J., Thursday and spent the day. Tuesday was enjoyed by Mr. and Mrs. McClain and children, and Mrs. Emma Lovett, at Coney Island, N. Y.

This is how a group of Mill Street business men looked last Wednesday when they picnicked at Burlington Island. Judging from their faces a good time was had by all. It was a jolly crowd, and business cares were laid aside.

EXPECT THOMPSON
BILL TO BE PASSED

State Authority Would Erect
School Houses and Lease
Them To Districts

TO VOTE ON IT TONIGHT

HARRISBURG, Aug. 15.—(INS)—The Thompson school bills, calling for the expenditure of $75,000,000 in Federal and State funds for the construction of possibly 1,000 new school houses, is scheduled for final passage tonight when the legislature reconvenes.

The bills, introduced by Sen. Edward J. Thompson, D. Centre, have already passed the Senate and are up for final passage in the House, where they have already received favorable action but have been held up until tonight due to typographical errors in the bills' printings.

One of the bills amends the General State Authority Act to permit the authority to construct school houses. The other amends the Public School Act to permit school districts to lease their school properties to the authority, which, in turn, would construct the schools and then re-lease them to the school districts. The school districts would then in turn pay rentals for the new school structures, for a term not exceeding 30 years.

A Thompson bill appropriating $1,000,000 to the Department of Public Instruction for paying rentals has already been passed by both houses and awaits the Governor's signature.

Mrs. Harry White Dies;
Funeral To Be Wednesday

Mrs. Katherine White, wife of Harry White, died yesterday, leaving as survivors her husband, five children, her father and two sisters.

Killed In Fall

Philadelphia, Aug. 15.—A middle-aged, well-dressed man, with $100 in his wallet and a large diamond ring on his finger, leaped or fell to death today from the sixth floor landing of a circular stairway in Philadelphia's City Hall. The victim was tentatively identified as Edward Brooks, address unknown, from a social security card found in his pocket.

Labor Strikes Give Wilson Headache

Philadelphia, Aug. 15.—Labor strikes presented Mayor S. Davis Wilson, arbitrator of many Philadelphia strikes, with a double-barreled headache.

Leaving the city's 2,000,000 residents virtually without taxicab service, approximately 1,000 union drivers were on strike this morning, shortly after the giant Philadelphia Storage Battery Company threatened to move its plants elsewhere, because of labor trouble.

The cab strike took 650 cars off the streets, and left only 100 independent taxis in operation. The Storage Battery plant, which manufactures Philco radios, and employs 13,000 at peak production, has been closed since last May 1st, when the management claims the workers walked out. The employees maintained they were locked out. Negotiations for new hour and wage contracts have failed because the company has insisted on an open shop, union leaders aver.

Trumbauersville borough will hold a special election on Tuesday, September 20, for the purpose of obtaining the assent of the qualified electors to increase the indebtedness of the borough by $20,000 to pay for the acquisition of land and for the construction of a public water supply system and fire alarm system.

Trumbauersville's assessed valuation of taxable property is $251,419 real estate, and $94,050 occupation, totaling $345,469.

The borough has no existing debt.

The thirtieth annual meeting of the Seiple Family was held at the Tockton Union church. A feature of the meeting was the unveiling and dedication of a large native stone memorial in commemoration of the arrival of the first immigrant ancestor, Henry Seiple, from the German Palatinate on September 29, 1738. His oldest son, George, born July 29, 1746, is buried in the Tockton cemetery. It is at his grave that the ceremony was held. The upper part of the memorial marker contains the inscription bearing part of the tombstone of his old-son. Inset in the lower part of the memorial is a large bronze plate bearing the following inscription:

"Erected in honor of the pioneer Seiples. This memorial marks the grave of George Ludwig Seiple, son of the immigrant ancestor Henry Seiple, who at the age of 27 arrived in Philadelphia on September 29, 1738, from the German Palatinate. He settled in Franconia township, Montgomery county, Pa., and later erected a mill nearby on a tract of land deeded by the Proprietaries of William Penn. Dedicated August 10, 1938, at the Thirtieth Annual Reunion of the Family."

TO HAVE "DAVE LANDRETH DAY" HERE, AUGUST 28TH

Individuals and Organizations
Out to Show Appreciation of Ball Team and Park

TO SELL 1,000 TICKETS

A "Dave Landreth Day" is to be held at the Landreth Ball Park on Sunday, August 28th. This announcement was made today by a group of supporters who are appreciative of the work "Dave" is doing in furnishing for Bristol, not only a first-class ball park, but a first-class ball team, as well.

The affair is being sponsored by prominent individuals and organizations in Bristol and plans yet to be consummated promise to make "Dave Landreth Day" one long to be remembered in Bristol.

The individuals and organizations backing the move are out to sell 1,000 tickets for the game on August 28th. The rain date selected for the game is September 4th. The name will be announced within the next day or two.

The suggestion of a "Dave Landreth Day" has met with town-wide response and keen interest is being manifested. "We are going to fill the Landreth Ball Park on that occasion," said an enthusiast today. "Dave Landreth is doing a fine piece of work for Bristol, and the town should show its approval."

Takes Dog To His Farm
At Request of Lad

There is a new dog up in Ottsville. "Jiggs" is his name and he arrived yesterday at the new Bucks County home of Stanley Howe, secretary to Mayor La Guardia of New York City.

If you ask "Jiggs," life's a funny proposition after all. Once he had a comfortable home and the best playmate in the world. Then, for the last month, for reasons that even his lively wire-haired fox terrier brain couldn't comprehend, he was made an outcast, and forced to live in an alley.

And then, yesterday, everything suddenly changed again and instead of the alley he had a fine home up in Bucks county, and a broad farm to scamper over. Things were looking up again. There were even cats to chase.

What "Jiggs" will never know is that he got his new home because his erstwhile young master, Dick Maples, 14, who lives up at 915 W. Lehigh avenue, Philadelphia, reads the newspapers and knows how to write letters.

What happened was this: Things were not moving along so fortunately in the Maples family—Dick and his 12-year-old brother, Jackie, and his mother. Last February his brother, Bill, died after an appendix operation.

About a month ago the family moved from the little house they had lived in and went to a small apartment. There was a bath on keeping dogs in the apartment and so "Jiggs" had to live out in the alley.

That made Dick feel bad because "Jiggs" was his pal. Day after day he wondered what he could do about it. Then one day he read in a newspaper all about the big farm of Stanley Howe, secretary of New York's Mayor La Guardia, up at Ottsville, Bucks county. That gave Dick an idea. He sat down and wrote Howe a letter, telling him all about it.

He asked Howe to take the dog to his farm.

"I am sure you will love him and he will sure bring you luck," he wrote. "For when we and our pals play a ball game or anything, we would shake 'Jiggs' for luck. And we sure did have it."

That was a conviction for Howe. Yesterday he went to Philadelphia, shook hands with Dick, complimented him on his love for his dog and took "Jiggs" away to his new home.

TO BUILD BOATS HERE

Phila. Shipbuilding Co. is Estimating On Work Almost Daily, It Is Said

LOW ON SOME BIDS

Company Leased Site Here For Yard Nearly A Year Ago

Those who are interested in the Philadelphia Shipbuilding Company are still hopeful of starting operations here. "We are bidding almost daily on work which we hope to get for the Bristol yard," stated H. L. Curtis, president of the company. Mr. Curtis was interviewed at his Philadelphia office and he made it emphatic that the lack of operations here is no fault of his organization.

Residents in this section had become skeptical about the yard ever starting work. Hundreds of rumors have been in circulation from time to time. Some of these reports were to the effect that work would get underway within two weeks; others stated that material had been ordered and that it was only a question of time before things would really be started.

"Mr. Curtis, the people of Bristol and vicinity are anxious to learn what are the prospects for the Bristol plant of the Philadelphia Shipbuilding Company," said a Courier representative.

It has been nearly a year since the Company leased a tract of land along the Delaware river here from Fleetwing, Inc. The portion leased, extending for 1,000 feet along the river, was part of the property of the Merchant Shipbuilding Corporation, during the World War, and there are still a number of the shipways remaining on the property.

"We have estimated on a lot of work," replied Mr. Curtis. "We have been low bidder in some instances but were counted out."

Then continuing, the head of the shipbuilding company said: "There has been a lot of work given out during the past three years. There is a lot more to be given out and we hope to get some of it. We have no contracts at the present time."

Questioned as to the possibility of contracts being awarded to a yard not equipped, Mr. Curtis' reply was that his company has options on equipment and that it could be readily obtained should contracts be received.

The ground here was leased last September and at that time Mr. Curtis said that operations would get underway within a short time and that between 500 and 600 men would be employed. Some work was done on the shipways, a plot of ground was staked out for a proposed building and an office building was erected. There activities ceased. A watchman has continued to be employed at the site.

"We are spending a little money every day at the Bristol plant," Mr. Curtis stated.

He then said there is a lot of work to be obtained in the building of cargo carriers. His conversation indicated that he is hopeful of obtaining some of this work.

The lease for the ground here, it was announced last September, covered a period of 10 years. It was stated that the company would build tank and freight steamers, approximately 300 to 450 feet in length, with a displacement from 6,000 to 10,000 tons. Plans were made to use four shipways.

Upon several occasions the company has been low bidders on government work, but for some unexplained reason has never been successful in landing any contract.

Mr. Curtis was associated with the Merchant Shipbuilding Corporation here during the war, and had a general knowledge of the condition of the shipways, pipe-lines and conduits, and it is believed that this influenced the organization of the Philadelphia Shipbuilding Company in its establishment here.

NONE MAY ASPIRE

No word has a meaning all its own. Virtually every word in the language has shades of meaning of different value to different individuals. A word may mean one thing in one locality and something quite dissimilar in another.

Take the word immigration, for example. In America, it means the influx of foreigners who are intent upon severing old ties with their fatherland and adopting a new national allegiance for themselves and their descendants henceforth and for all time. In Germany, however, especially with relation to some 30,000 recent newcomers from Italy, it means only a temporary stay, a temporary job and the continuation of all native national and political connections; more than that, it means, if anything, a strengthening of loyalty to the nation from which the 30,000 "emigrated." If Mussolini has failed to teach these persons all about the virtues of Fascism, Germany will complete the lessons.

The Italian peasants have gone to Germany under contract as farmhands for seven or eight months. Emigration, which once was an individual adventure, now has become a collective enterprise. The emigrants are recruited by the Italian state, organized like soldiers, given their destination, a uniform, a bag of one standard pattern and rail fare to central Germany or lower Saxony, where farm labor is needed. The wages are small, none can become wealthy, none can lift himself from his ironbound caste as farm laborer, none may aspire to German citizenship, however great may be his initiative, abilities, resources, talents and ambition. Each person must return to Italy at the end of the allotted period, a laborer with a few lire in pocket if he is thrifty.

During the "emigration" period, Germany sees to it that all the 30,000 guests are well supplied with propaganda material which tells them how great is Italy and Fascism. However enamored any of these Italians may become of the land of their sojourn, they must renounce their love and go back home.

QUEEN OF THE SEAS AGAIN

Queen Mary can add "of the Seas" to her royal title again. The British liner has completed a west-bound Atlantic crossing in three days, 21 hours and 48 minutes from the record set by the Normandie a year ago when the great French ship regained temporary possession of the oceanic crown. So Queen Mary reigns again.

How long her reign will continue unbroken depends on those resourceful French—for the Normandie is the only liner afloat which can hope to improve on the Queen Mary's marvelous time. There is one little international rivalry which the Anglo-French Entente isn't trying to end by diplomatic negotiation.

Hollywood seems now to have considered every possibility except Martha Raye for the role of Scarlett, and letting her swing it.

ECHOES OF THE PAST

By Courier Staff Member

Review of the news as it appeared in the Bucks County Gazette issue dated at Bristol Jan. 18, 1877. The Gazette, a weekly newspaper published in Bristol, was discontinued following its merger with the Courier.

In Nathan Helling's fruit houses are stored over 62,000 barrels of apples from this fall's crop. A large amount of the stock was purchased in Michigan and Western New York.

Samuel Hibbs, another of our residents, died on Monday morning, very suddenly, having been ill but a few hours previous to his death. He had attained to more than the allotted three score years and ten—being 80 years of age. The funeral takes place this afternoon.

The night school had a good send-off on Monday night, 98 pupils were admitted and between 30 and 40 were denied admittance because they were over 21 years of age. It seems to us that if these rejected applicants are desirous of obtaining the means of improving their education they should receive aid from some quarter.

We are shortly to have another manufacturing establishment in our borough, something different from anything in this part of the country, the nearest factory being in Pittsburgh. This new industry is a factory for manufacturing white lead kegs. The business will be conducted under the name of A. Pursell & Co. Mr. Pursell is a brother of Dr. Howard Pursell, and with his family has already arrived here from Williamsport. The machinery is expected this week, and Banes & Bro. are to furnish a 10-horse power engine which with the other machinery will be ready in time to go into operation about the first of February. The location of the establishment will be at the foot of Cedar street, and its capacity will be 600 or 700 kegs per day. At the start it will have about 15 employees and as the business increases, as it naturally will, more workmen will be needed.

Samuel Pike, one of our oldest and most respected citizens, died on Sunday in the 75th year of his age. He had been in ill health for several months past, but not confined to his house until quite recently, so that scarcely anyone was prepared to receive the news of his death without surprise. Mr. Pike was engaged in the hardware business for over 20 years, but about two years ago he relinquished it on account of ill health, and removed to his new house on the river bank. For several years he has been in office as a member of the borough council of which he was a member at the time of his death. He also held the office of postmaster during the administration of President Taylor.

On Tuesday evening, Mr. J. W. Wright had quite a surprise at his residence on Otter street. It was nothing less startling and novel than the entrance of a horse and sleigh through his front door. It appears that a man and woman were in the sleigh going down Otter street, and when opposite Mr. Wright's house, a train of cars

"It's You I Want" by ALLENE CORLISS

CHAPTER XVII

Whitney sat down, in a deep chair. And now she had stopped trembling and was curiously calm. In just a few minutes Scott would leave. He would walk out of this room and get into a cab and take a train and Olivia would meet him in Boston. She had been unduly disturbed. He would not stay over and take her to dinner and dance with her. They were alone together in this quiet room and he had promised not to kiss her. Or even touch her. Everything was all right. Except that she still hurt so. But presently, when he had gone away, that would stop too.

She said: "I'm probably behaving a little absurdly, Scott. I suppose if you have something to say to me there is no reason why we shouldn't sit here quietly and say it."

"That's better, darling. That's a whole lot better." He smiled at her. Then he said: "What frightened you so badly five months ago, Whit, that you suddenly had to leave Boston? Was it because I took you to Brad Lewis' apartment that night?"

Her hands began to tremble again. She clenched them softly. "That . . . and other things."

"What other things? You have to tell me."

"No, I don't have to tell you. But I will. I left Boston because of Olivia, really . . ."

Scott leaned forward. "I don't believe it, Whit. I think you left because for some reason you were afraid to stay . . . afraid of what might happen . . ."

Whitney said: "All right; I left because I was afraid to stay." Suddenly she knew she could never tell him the truth. That she had left because Olivia had asked her to. There were some things you couldn't do to another woman. That was one of them. So she said again: "I left because I was afraid to stay."

"Just as you were afraid of what might happen if I came here this afternoon. Oh, my dear, don't you know I couldn't possibly have gone back to Boston without seeing you . . . don't you know that's what I came for, really?"

They were both on their feet. This was the moment she had been dreading. The moment she had feared. Her hands were pushing hard against his shoulders. If his arms once went around her she was lost. . . a train would leave for Boston and he would not be on it . . . and there was Olivia and she had promised . . .

Her voice struck at him, tight and punished. "You said you wouldn't . . . you promised, Scott."

"I was a fool to promise anything so impossible. Kiss me, Whit, and I'll go. I'll go, darling, but kiss me once."

Kiss me once and I will go. Yes, you would go, Scott, but you would come back. I would want you to come back. I would not want to go on living if you didn't. So you see I can't kiss you, Scott . . . not even once.

She said: "I can't, Scott. You mustn't ask me to . . . don't you see that if I did we wouldn't have a chance . . ."

Suddenly his hands lost their urgency and he stood looking quietly into her eyes, his own bewildered and tormented. He said: "Perhaps you're right, Whit. I guess you are. I couldn't kiss you and leave you . . . and I have to leave you . . ."

"Yes," said Whitney. "Olivia is meeting your train . . . you are going on to a dance. Good-by, Scott." Good-by, Scott. It is not yet seven o'clock and you have come and gone. The room is very still. So short a time as ten minutes ago you were standing in that doorway,

Sitting in that chair. That is your cigarette in that ash tray. It is still alive. But you are gone. Yet you were here in this room. You touched me. And your hair was very golden and your eyes loved me . . . and your hands . . . and your voice when you said my name loved me . . .

But you are married to a girl in Boston. A girl named Olivia. And so I didn't let you kiss me, Scott. I fit into your arms as I shall never fit into any other arms in the world and I hurt inside when I look at you. We belong together, Scott, but you spoiled all that once and forever and so on your way to the South Station in time to dress and go on to a dance and presently I shall go and bathe and change into something suitable for dining out and call Jay and he will come and take me to some cool place, a roof, probably, and order food for me which I will pretend to eat. And in a few hours it will be tomorrow and life will go on and all the days of the week will be the same again and after a while I will stop hurting so . . . because one can hurt like this only just so long . . .

And that was the way it was. She moved mechanically through the days that immediately followed and gradually the pain inside her grew less and less until finally it went away and when she thought of Scott there was just a morbid numbness again. This wasn't to last, of course . . . at intervals, it was to desert her and she was to live that hour over and eventually she was even to arrive at the place where she felt she had been a fool to send Scott away like that. But that was much later . . . it was almost a year later.

In the meantime, Tod came to New York for a week-end.

Seeing him again, she was astonished and shocked to realize how much she had missed him. She had kissed him last on a wind-swept pier in East Boston and her lips had been cold and salt with tears. She kissed him today in Grand Central Station and he was tall and thin and endearingly familiar . . . and she had forgotten for a while how much she had always liked him.

He grinned at her, that quick, friendly smile that was perhaps the nicest thing about him, and said: "Thanks for being so glad to see me, nut . . . I had no idea you would meet my train . . . I only wired in hopes you could arrange to have a free evening . . ."

She was wearing a slim gray frock the color of her eyes and a wide-brimmed hat. She smelled faintly and delightfully of gardenias. She was thinner and in five months she had grown intangibly, and almost disarmingly, older. He thought: "New York and living with Helena and having a job have all done something permanent to her . . . I don't know yet whether I like it or not . . ."

But later, having dinner with her, he decided that he did. She had left Boston an awfully young girl. She would never be quite so young again but somehow she had managed to become more adult without sacrificing any of the things which had always made her so completely lovely and ultimately desirable. And she might so easily not have, might have, in the past few months, grown cynical and brittle. Even a little hard. He realized suddenly how much he had been afraid that she would do this and how relieved he was that she hadn't. And he tried to tell her something about it. He said: "You've done a swell job of growing up, Whit . . . and you might have made such a mess of it."

She stared at him, remembering suddenly that once Scott had told her much the same thing. He had said: "Whit, darling, you have grown up beautifully . . ." and that had been three springtimes ago and she had been seventeen.

She said: "I thought I grew up long ago . . . but perhaps I didn't. Tell me about Boston, Tod."

Her eyes were wide and soft beneath the brim of her hat and she had the loveliest mouth in the world. Gay and ardent and soft-lipped. He had not seen her for five months and he had missed her beyond all measure and she said tell me about Boston. She meant tell me about Scott . . . tell me that he misses me, that he is unbearably desolate without me.

He said: "I suppose you want to know about Scott. Well, he's all right. Not outstandingly happy, I suppose. But he gets by."

Whitney breathed quickly. Tell him you've seen Scott. Tell him Scott came to New York last week and you saw him. You've always been honest with Tod. Be honest with him about this . . .

And she would have been but Tod spoke first. He said: "I think I ought to tell you that Olivia is doing her damndest to make a go of things. You can't help admiring the way she is trying to hold things steady. The girl has courage, Whit."

Olivia has courage. Olivia is trying to make a go of things. Better not tell him, after all. It only upsets you to talk about it and it wasn't important . . . but talking about it, even with Tod, will make it seem important.

She said: "I'm glad things are working out for her . . . if not well, at least fairly well." Then she said: "But I haven't seen you for forever and ever. Tell me about yourself, Tod."

She said tell me about yourself, Tod . . . and what was there to tell her? Except all the things he had for years so carefully refrained from telling her. That without her Boston was a lost and desolate city . . . that he loved her so much that just sitting here opposite her in this crowded room gave him more fierce pleasure than he had known in all the long months he had been away from her . . . that he loved her so much that he didn't see how he had ever managed to stay away all that time or how he was going to bring himself to leave her when this week-end was over.

But he would, of course. He would spend this evening and the next two days with her and then he would go back to Boston. Nothing was any different. Everything was just the same. She loved Scott. She had always loved Scott. He didn't know, he couldn't be sure about it, but there was a chance that she always would love Scott. Whether she did or not, there wasn't the remotest chance that she would ever love him, Tod. So smile at her and be gay and casual and moderately amusing. Take her dancing and buy her violets because you know she adores them and go riding with her Sunday morning in Central Park. Never touch her except affectionately, because affection is all she wants or ever will want from you, and eventually kiss her goodbye in Grand Central Station and go back to Boston and write more and better stories for one of the biggest newspapers in the country . . . that's your bed, Tod, old son. You didn't make it but you damned well have to lie in it . . .

THE THREE BUDGETEERS

"Oh, dear," sighed the first, "I'm so tired.

I finally found out what I wanted, but I'm worn out."

"It's lovely," sighed the second, "but I paid more than I wanted to."

"It's easy," said the third. "I've been studying the advertisements for days, and I knew where to look for what I wanted—and how much I'd have to pay."

ON SCREENS IN BRISTOL

BRISTOL
Spencer Tracy, 1938 Academy Award winner, co-starred with the beautiful Loretta Young, returns to the Bristol Theatre screen, today, in Columbia's "Man's Castle," the most glorious romance since "Seventh Heaven." Directed by Frank Borzage, "Man's Castle" unfolds a tale of love born in sombre, poverty-ridden surroundings and climbing above these surroundings to soul-stirring and eternal warmth.

Spencer Tracy, whose recent triumphs include "Test Pilot" and "Captains Courageous," for which he won the year's "best actor" trophy, appears as an irresponsible, gruff but kind vagrant who takes under his wing a hungry, homeless and helpless girl. His miserable shanty home in a squalid squatter community becomes the scene of their ecstatic love affair.

Also in the cast are Glenda Farrell, who sings several numbers in her characterization of a musical comedy star attracted to the rugged Tracy; Walter Connolly, a former preacher turned night-watchman; Marjorie Rambeau, as a broken-down woman of the streets; Arthur Hohl, and young Dickie Moore.

GRAND
With an all-star cast in support, under the baton of one of Hollywood's best directors and in a story by the authors of Deanna Durbin's latest hit, Danielle Darrieux sensational French screen star, makes her expectantly awaited American film debut in "The Rage of Paris," Universal comedy romance, which comes to the Grand Theatre on Monday and Tuesday.

Luminary of both the French stage and screen, this 21-year-old beauty has appeared in some of the most successful European films in recent seasons. She is perhaps best known for her role opposite Charles Boyer in "Mayerling" which won the New York cinema critics' prize as the best foreign film of the past year.

Starred opposite Mlle. Darrieux in "The Rage of Paris" is Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., while featured parts are played by the owl-eyed Mischa Auer, Helen Broderick, noted comedienne, and Louis Hayward portraying the third side of the romantic triangle in the film.

EIGHT GOOD BOUTS IN STORE FOR FANS AT ST. ANN'S ARENA

Surprise in Store, Straffe Announces, for Patrons Tonight

HAS A GOOD CARD

Pearson and Myers May Be Included In The List

Eight good bouts are in store for the boxing fans of this vicinity tonight as the St. Ann's Athletic Association holds another of its weekly boxing shows in its arena, Wood and Franklin streets.

Matchmaker Johnny Straffe has tentative bouts lined up and is waiting approval of the Middle Atlantic district of the A. A. U. Straffe has a surprise for the fans and claims that if the sanctions go through, he will have one of the best shows of this vicinity.

There is a possibility that the Russ Pearson, Langhorne, and Joe Myers, Croydon, bout may go on tonight. This bout was called off twice and has been hanging fire for over a month. Death in Pearson's family called off the bout last week and if the colored boy is in condition, he will go on tonight.

Hokey Leighton, the Croydon bear-cat, will have plenty of trouble with his opponent, Jack Sterling, Roebling. Sterling has been here on different occasions and on his last appearance boxed the ears off Tally Scarra. He is a lanky youth and possesses one of the longest arms for a fighter in the 130 lb. class.

Leighton seeks to avenge the defeat given to Scarra but knows the capabilities of his foe and instead of doing a lot of dancing and side-stepping is expected to do plenty of fighting.

A newcomer to these parts, Joe Lilli, Trenton, will meet Carl Spinelli, St. Ann's. Ray Robinson, Langhorne, who looked good in defeat last week is also expected to be on the card.

There is some doubt as to whether Freddie Budassi, St. Ann's, will be able to meet Steve Litus, Roebling. Litus appears to be too heavy for the St. Ann's fighter and this bout may be eliminated.

First bout is expected to begin at 8.30 o'clock sharp.

SNYDER WEAKENS IN SEVENTH; GAME LOST

Hal Snyder weakened in the seventh innings here after pitching a great game up to that point, giving away to Narcisi of the Grundy team who was hit for two home runs in the eighth inning, Wentz Olney scoring 7 runs in that inning, giving the Phila. Leaguers the game, 14-2. Hal Snyder also had a home run in the third inning. Wooley, McDonald, Bolland, McMillen hit the ball hard. Pete Choma had three hits for the local club. Baurth and McGinley played a nice fielding game for the A. A. club.

Riggs May Threaten Grand Slam

Chief threat to Don Budge's efforts to score a grand slam in the tennis world is young Bobby Riggs, sensational Chicago netter. Budge has annexed the Australian, French and English tennis crowns and is out to make a clean sweep when the U. S. national tourney opens at Forest Hills, N. Y., in September. Riggs has won 13 out of 17 tournaments this season and is recognized as second ranking racket wielder in the nation.

CROYDON Y. M. A. WINS OVER LOGAN A. C., 11-3

Croydon Y. M. A. annexed their 12th victory yesterday afternoon at Croydon by the score of 11-3. A large crowd helped the Croydonites to open their new home field, the losers being Logan A. C.

The features of the game were the slugging of Buck Friel and Wally Oppman of the winners and Jack Rago of the losers. Both pitchers were liberal with hits but Devoe was able to keep them scattered.

Wednesday evening of this week the Y. M. A. will again try to open the series with the St. Luke's Club of Croydon which was called the past week after four innings of play on account of rain. St. Luke's led at that time by a 5-0 score but it was called no contest because five innings have been decreed for twilight ball to be an official game.

Intense rivalry exists between the youngsters and the oldsters (St. Luke's) so all patrons are urged to come early and get the choice seats. Play starts promptly at 6.30 p. m.

CLIMBING SNAKE

AKRON, O. — (INS) — A "climbing" black snake invaded a bird's nest 18 feet high in a tree and kidnapped a baby bird despite efforts of the parents to beat off the assailant. The snake was killed by witnesses but not before it had gobbled up the little bird and mystified everyone by its climbing ability.

ments in the field of electricity; but it was recognized as a revolutionary improvement in home heating, and added substantially to his prestige. It might have made a fortune for him, as the Governor of Pennsylvania offered him a patent to prevent others from selling it. He refused the patent because of his belief that "as we enjoy great advantages from the inventions of others, we should be glad of an opportunity to serve others by any invention of ours, and this we should do freely and generously."

The "Pennsylvania Fireplace" is in reality a cast iron stove designed to be installed in an open fireplace. Its installation requires the construction of a false back of brickwork four inches or more from the true back and the closing of the space over the fireplace between the false back and the breast of the chimney. Thus the heated air is prevented from going up the chimney, while the smoke is conveyed hither through a passage under the false back. Through this invention, Franklin not only kept smoke out of many colonial eyes, but also added greatly to indoor comfort, as his fireplace distributed its warmth more generally throughout the room, so that people were not forced to crowd around the fire and be "scorcht before, and, as it were, froze behind," as he expressed it.

One of the principal advantages lies in the fact that the "Pennsylvanian Fireplace" heats fresh outside air and sends it out into the room instead of heating stale room air, while the latter is used for combustion and passes with the smoke up the chimney. Franklin estimated that "near ten barrels of fresh air are hourly introduced by the air-box; and by this means the air in the room is continually changed, and kept, at the same time, sweet and warm." The heated air, prevented from going up the chimney by the closure above the fireplace, is forced out in front of the mantelpiece, where it rises to the ceiling and spreads out over the room, to be forced down by further streams of newly-warmed air. Thus the entire room becomes warm, and there being no continual movement of cold air from the room into the fireplace, strong drafts from cracks around doors or windows are eliminated.

In a pamphlet entitled "An Account of the New-Invented Pennsylvania Fire-Places," which Franklin wrote in 1744 to promote the demand for his invention, and which, incidentally, is no mean specimen of advertising copy, he described fourteen advantages which it possessed above the common fireplace. The technique of heating and ventilation, prevention of colds, and protection against fire were subjects in which Franklin maintained a lifelong scientific interest, and they are all included among the objectives of this invention. "I love economy exceedingly," he once wrote; and, concerning his fireplace, he pointed out that "as very little of the heat is lost, when this fireplace is used, much less wood will serve you, which is a considerable advantage where wood is dear."

The York Hospital is a modern institution of 390 beds and has a well known and excellent reputation. Miss Fenstermacher will enter her new position August 22nd.

Penshurst Princess Kendrick, a two-year-old Ayrshire heifer owned by the Spring Cress Farm of Walter Dietz, Yardley, during June completed a production of 898 lbs. 5.70% milk, 51.19 lbs. of butterfat on a twice-a-day milking schedule in the Ayrshire Herd Test.

Since this is the only animal of milking age in Mr. Dietz' ownership, the June production of this heifer also constitutes the herd average for the month and is the highest average completed during the month of June by any herd in the United States enrolled in the Ayrshire Herd Test.

The registry of Perkasio Real Estate, a WPA project which has been in progress here approximately six months is 95 per cent completed. Within the next fortnight there will be available in the office of the borough a complete draft of every parcel of real estate in the borough, drawn to scale showing the exact proportional dimensions, location and street number together with the name of the present owner. This work will be bound in convenient volumes and a card index system will permit a quick and convenient finding of any parcel or property in the borough.

In the event of the exchange of borough real estate the change of ownership will be noted on the map. This handy information will greatly facilitate the work of assessors and Tax Collectors and provide a permanent record for the borough offices.

PREVIEW OF A SEASON

By the calendar it's still Summer . . . but it's Autumn by the advertisements! They're starting now with exciting bulletins from the fashion front, news of special fur and furniture sales, and clever ideas for home decoration.

Turn the pages! So those are the hats we'll wear this Fall! Here's a chance to select your winter coat —of fur, or fur trimmed—at a great saving. There are items of interest to September brides and grooms looking for unusual values in furnishings for the new home. Right alongside is a description of the latest in window hangings that would lure Mother from her preoccupation with the children's school wardrobes.

Look ahead to Autumn for a season of thrilling activity . . . and look to your favorite newspaper's advertising columns for a foretaste of coming fashions in clothes, and housefurnishings and entertaining. Buy, when you're ready, from the merchants who, through their printed messages, have kept you posted, guided you to values, and saved you money. Read the advertisements . . . and be ready for Fall.
